A WHISTLE for WANDA

"HOW DO I look, mother? Do I look all right? I mean, do I look...you know..." Wanda's large brown eyes pleaded with her mother to say that she looked super-duper-scrumptious! For this was Wanda's first venture into the glamorous world of the theater!

"You look perfect!" her mother assured her. "Run along now and be a big success!"

As Wanda walked to the school auditorium, where the rehearsal was going to be held, she kept snatching glimpses of herself in the store windows she passed. "It's no use," she told herself with complete honesty, "I'm not beautiful! I'm not even pretty! Miss Hall chose me for the part because I'm the right size to fit into the costume they've got. There's nothing special about me, at all, except to mother. And she knows me!"

By the time she got to the auditorium, Wanda was no longer the happy, elated girl she had been such a short time ago. There was no use in pretending that she would be a star or even very good. She was just an average girl, no more! And it took much more than an average girl to attract the attention of a boy like Jimmy Blaze. Jimmy would be the star of the play, naturally! He was the star of everything he was in!

"If I make any mistakes, he'll probably laugh at me and I couldn't stand that!" Wanda thought. "I'll forget my lines or trip or do something terrible, I know I will! I... I'd rather not be noticed at all than laughed at!"

As she started to walk down the aisle towards the stage, Wanda felt shyness sweeping over her. It was more than shyness. It was real fear. She'd never been in a school play before. She couldn't...she wouldn't...

She was about to turn and run when a sound filled the auditorium. It was a long, low, deliberate whistle consisting of two notes, the first higher and shriller than the second. It was the kind of whistle so often directed at the glamor girls of the high school, the girls who really rated!

For some reason, this infuriated Wanda. It was bad enough to be perfectly ordinary. It was worse to be as scared as she was at this moment. But it was infuriating to be mocked by that sarcastic whistle!

Anger gave Wanda courage. "You...you...how dare you?" she addressed Jimmy directly, not caring about anything but her own hurt feelings. "I suppose you think you're pretty clever, making fun of me!"

Jimmy Blaze stared at Wanda. "It was just...part of the rehearsal!" he explained. "I'm supposed to whistle at you and I was practicing!"

Wanda felt like a complete and utter fool. "Oh, I...I..." she stammered an apology to Jimmy, who was seeing, for the first time, her cheeks pink with anger and embarrassment, her eyes sparkling with indignation and tears.

"Golly!" Jimmy said. "You don't have to feel that way, Wanda! I've just made a big discovery! You ought to be whistled at...if it won't make you sore!"

"It won't!" Wanda assured him, feeling suddenly happy.

WATCHING BILL SIMPSON join a crowd of boys outside the school entrance, Nonnie heaved a great sigh. She sighed again and Helen, her dearest friend, regarded her with curiosity.

"How come?" Helen asked.

"How come what?" Nonnie countered, honestly unaware that she had sighed so visibly.

"How come that sad sigh?" Helen wanted to know. "Anything you ought to tell me?"

Nonnie hesitated and then confessed. "It's hopeless love," she admitted. "Bill Simpson doesn't even know I'm in town. He's so busy with that darned old football practice of his, he never even looks at a girl!"

"Well, at least you don't have to worry about competition," Helen pointed out practically. "Why don't you make him notice you?"

"What do you mean?" Nonnie's question was hopeful.

"Call him up, ask him whether he's taking anyone to the game, invite him over to your house...you know!"

Nonnie was plainly horrified. "Oh, no! I couldn't! That would be chasing!"

"Hmmm...guess it would, at that..." Both Helen and Nonnie felt strongly on the subject of chasing, which was something no really nice girl did. "Well, there ought to be something you could do!"

"I know. But what?" Baffled, Nonnie tried to think of some way to attract Bill Simpson, some way that would not be obvious!

"Gosh, I don't know, Nonnie. I ought to be more helpful, but I'm so worried about that old history exam,

I could scream! I've got to get to the library and find that book Miss Higgins wants us to read or I'm a dead duck! And there are only four copies!"

"Wait a minute!" Nonnie's eyes lit up mischievously. "Bill Simpson's in your history class, isn't he?"

"Of course he is!"

"Then he's got to read that book, too!"

"What are you up to?" Helen asked curiously as Nonnie fell into step beside her.

"Never you mind! I'm going to the library with you!"

That very evening, right after dinner, Nonnie's mother answered the phone and called to her daughter, "It's for you, dear! Bill Simpson!"

"Hello?" Nonnie could barely keep the tremors out of her voice.

"Hi, this is Bill Simpson. Look, Nonnie, I was over at the library today, lookin' for that history book we've got to read in Miss Higgins' class and the librarian said I'd have to reserve it because all the copies were out! But I've got to have it..."

"Wasn't it clever of you to find out I had a copy!" Nonnie remarked.

"Well, I asked around and Helen Ronalds told me you did, so I was hoping..."

"Don't give it another thought! Why don't you come over and get it? I'll be home all evening!"

"Gee, you're wonderful!" Bill said gratefully. "I'll be right over. Thanks!"

"Is there any chocolate cake left, mother?" asked Nonnie.
